To Decide Whether to Appoint
Former Crown Prince or Rescind Renunciation

SON MAY BE THE HEIR

Carol Renounced His Right
To Succession in December, 1925

BUCHAREST, June 7.—(INS)—The Rumanian Cabinet convened here today to decide whether to appoint former Crown Prince Carol, who returned here from exile last night, to succeed his brother, Prince Nicholas, on the Regency, or rescind Carol's renunciation of right of succession and make him King.

The latter procedure was viewed in official circles as the most likely. His son, the present King Michael, would become his heir.

Carol renounced his right to succession to the throne on December 31, 1925, and, since that time, he has lived in exile, mostly in France.

A few days ago, he separated from Mme. Maeda Lupescu, for whom he gave up his right to the Rumanian throne. Word of his separation and reports of a possible reconciliation with his divorced wife Princess Helen, mother of his son, the boy King Michael, were the most recent indications that Prime Minister Dr. Julius Maniu was working towards the recall of Carol to take his rightful place in his homeland.

The Deputies and Senators have been kept informed of the progress of secret negotiations which have been conducted between the Government and Carol. The National Assembly probably will meet Monday to act on the Cabinet's recommendation.

News of Carol's return spread quickly through the capital. Crowds filled the streets early in the morning and groups everywhere were discussing Carol's sensational return with pleased expressions on their faces.

Twilight League Game Called On Account of Rain

The Bristol Twilight League game between the Independents and St. Ann's was called in the second inning because of rain. When umpire-in-chief Elmer stopped the proceedings the score was 4-4. A slight downpour had stopped the game in the first inning but after a short intermission the rain stopped and the boys went to it again. In the second another shower came and the ball became too wet to use, so the game was called.

Sharp Objects Being Picked Up from Streets by Scouts

Good turns are being done the community of Bristol today by many of the Boy Scouts of the borough.

In all wards have the Scouts been seen today, armed with bags, express-wagons, etc., in which they place sharp objects picked up from the streets.

Shortly after many of the lads started out this morning their receptacles were well filled with nails, tacks, pieces of glass, tin, etc., which might harm automobile tires, feet of barefoot children, or injure anyone who might fall.

These are indeed good turns, and in encouraging words should the public express its appreciation to the boys of this great organization.

IDEAL TOUR GIVEN TO NIAGARA FALLS

Leads Through Scenic Regions of Pennsylvania and New Jersey

A TOTAL OF 400 MILES

An ideal honeymoon tour that leads through scenic regions of Pennsylvania and New York to Niagara Falls, has been mapped by the Keystone Automobile Club for the benefit of newlyweds. The tour however, also provides a delightful 400 mile vacation jaunt.

"From Niagara Falls a number of interesting side trips can be taken including a journey to that enchanting summer vacation land known as the Thousand Islands," says Russell B. Carly, representative of the club.

While both New York and Pennsylvania are provided with a network of excellent hard-surfaced highways the most picturesque route on which to start the tour is northward over the Lackawanna Trail. From Bristol pass through Langhorne, Newtown and Buckingham to Doylestown. Here national route 611 leads from Doylestown to Easton where a left turn leads through Wind Gap and the Pocono section to Scranton.

From here national route 6, known as the Sullivan Trail, winds through attractive scenic regions and across the New York-Pennsylvania boundary to Watery. From here state route 17 is followed through Elmira and Corning to Painted Post. Northward over State route 2 the journey continues around the edge of a beautiful lake region through Bath and Avon, in the heart of a vast dairy country.

State route 5 is followed through Batavia to Buffalo. From here excellent highways lead northward along the American side of the Niagara section to the falls.

In addition to the thundering waters of the great cataracts, other scenic wonders include the Cave of the Winds, the Rapids set amid delightful landscape, some of which is enhanced in beauty through colored illumination at night. From here the choice of two attractive routes to the Thousand Islands is offered. One leads through Canada by the way of St. Catharines, Hamilton, Port Hope and Kingston. On the American side a second route passes through Rochester and Fairhaven to Watertown. At the end of either route the famous Thousand Islands extends for more than forty miles along the beautiful St. Lawrence Valley to Prescott.

The homeward journey from Niagara Falls can be diversified by State route 18 south from Buffalo through Hamburg and Salamanca. From this point the highway skirts the edge of the beautiful Allegheny State Park on the way to Bradford. Here a left turn into state route 46 leads to Farmers Valley where the famous Roosevelt Highway, marked as national route 6 is met. A left turn carries the travelers through Port Allegany, Coudersport and Wellsboro to Covington where the Susquehanna trail is reached. A right turn into this highway leads homeward over the same route on which the journey started.

The annual spring flower show conducted by the Trevese Horticultural Society opened at the Trevese Community House last evening, with a wealth of blooms in evidence.

Ponies predominated in the display but there are numerous other kinds of flowers arranged in baskets, bowls and vases.

This show each year attracts many from the surrounding sections. The flowers will be displayed this afternoon and this evening also. A small charge is made for admission.

Each year an essay contest is conducted among the school children in connection with the flower show at Trevese, the subject being "The Value of Flower Gardens to the Home." Prizes are presented to the winners.

KEEPING UP WITH THE "JONES"

By the Strolger

You have to go some nowadays to keep up with the "Jones's." And this proves the story:

Several days ago a woman sometimes going under the name of Jones, abandoned her baby on the doorstep of Mrs. Ella Smith, 302 Wood street. Mrs. Smith's maiden name was Jones.

The abandoned infant after receiving treatment at the Harriman Hospital was adopted into the family of Chief of Police Linford Jones.

Despite the checkered career of the abandoned baby his name is still Jones.

THE UNIVERSE EXPANDS

When the ancients conceived the notion of building the Tower of Babel, they doubtless thought a structure a mere mile or so high would touch the roof of the heavens. They had no telescopes or astronomical science to give proper perspective to the interstellar spaces.

For the same reason the world believed for many centuries that the earth was the center of the universe. Later, it accepted the Copernican theory that the sun was the center of motion of the earth and other planets. Now comes Dr. Harlow Shapley, Harvard astronomer, with the announcement that the center of the galaxy of stars, suns and nebulæ in which terra firma has an infinitesimal toehold has been located in the Milky Way at a distance of 47,000 light years. Finally, he is hunting with telescopes and cameras for a general and still more distant hub around which the whole humanly comprehensible universe of stars, planets and nebulæ revolves.

How the heavens have grown and how tiny the earth has become! Likewise, how lucky is Dr. Shapley to be living in this relatively broad-minded and tolerant age. As late as 1633 Galileo was forced to abjure publicly the Copernican theory. But today the astronomers are perfectly safe in letting their thoughts and telescopic eyes "float out across the cosmic reaches to where Canopus swims." The world no longer tortures astronomical "heretics" or burns witches and religious dissenters. Pioneers of all kinds are allowed a freer hand than ever before in human history. Perhaps it is not too much to hope that a time may come when the mass of the people will even regard new ideas about politics, literature, art and social relationships as something less than "heresy."

HUMOR

The sense of humor has been called a saving grace. Some have even considered it necessary to salvation. It is certain that possession of it by the proper persons would have spared the world many catastrophes.

Even the Bible makes room for humor. Hear much-afflicted Job making sport of his three comforters: "No doubt but ye are the people and wisdom shall die with you." In the fascinating story of the Magi the sacred writer tells us that these men from out of the East made a laughing stock of old Herod. They "mocked" him, and made him make a fool of himself.

Of another Herod, who, like his predecessor, thought he could outwit Heaven's decrees, a fine touch of humor is recorded. When the Pharisees told Jesus that Herod was going to "get him," He boldly answered: "Go ye and tell that fox."

Many a trying situation in life might be tided over if people would only use a little humor as lubricant. They are too everlastingly serious over trifles that could be, and ought to be, laughed off.

Of too many is it truthfully to be said: "A man cannot make him laugh; but that's no marvel; he drinks no wine." It should be necessary to make people sad and melancholy, rather than to make them merry.

Discuss Problems of County Welfare Worker

First of all, he said, it will be found that Pennsylvania has not been fair to its people because it has failed to provide adequate institutional care for the mentally deficient.

"Anybody can find some of them," he said, "but then what are you going to do with them? We have no place to put them, without waiting a year or two. It is a big problem, but it is worthwhile studying. One of the great troubles is that many unfortunate go on adding to the supply of paupers, deficient and delinquent but the sooner that problem is tackled the more quickly will the number be reduced.

"In this county the children's aid society functioned rather efficiently at one time but it is not so active as formerly.

"I feel the proper thing for the county to do is to get a welfare worker who will be associated with the Court. I would prefer to do this independent of the State. You know your needs best. You are fortunate in having Judge Keller and District Attorney Easton, who are very much interested in the problem, because they see the need every day. And distress is keenest in cases that are touched by the courts.

"But do not make the mistake of thinking that these problems are presented only by the poor families. They come from the better and the best families. It will be a credit to Bucks county to take some action of this kind."

SYNOPSIS

Members of the African tribe have foregathered to witness the initiation that will make Dawn, a bride of the black god Malungu. As such she would be supplied in time of war and famine. Dawn knows nothing of her past, save that her father was English. Excitement is intense in the settlement in the British East African Protectorate, which Captain Eric has seized for Germany. Dawn views the approaching ceremonies with commingled loathing and fear. The crowds dispersed with the arrival of the much-loved whip man, Shep Keyes, who dominates black and white equally by his towering frame and reputation of cruelty.

INSTALLMENT FOUR

Others insisted that he was the son of a Portuguese slave-trader, born on a Coast settlement and abandoned with his mother. At times it pleased him to lend implied authenticity to this legend. Especially in conversation with Dawn, whom he disgusted rather than awed, he spoke proudly of their common lightness of skin. But when Dawn, to taunt him, spoke admiringly of Tom Allen's Caucasian handsomeness, Shep forthwith reviled all the white men ever born. He hated Tom Allen with an unabating, unreasonable intensity. One night, after watching Dawn laugh and chat with Tom as he sat with friends on the veranda of Mooka's canteen, Shep informed her that he would henceforth be her protector. Indeed, it was in this capacity that he had invaded Hasmail's services.

"So," he addressed the priest, "you're going to make Dawn marry your idol, are you?"

"It is the will of Malungu," returned Hasmail tactfully.

"Is that so?" Shep emitted a sinister laugh. "You don't tell me." "On the full of the moon she is bride to a god," Hasmail spoke with a simulated courage he was far from knowing. "Tomorrow Dawn is Thabhu to all men."

Shep repeated the priest's words mockingly, amending them with a blasphemy. He upraised his whip, the natives shrinking back and Hasmail cringing in anticipation of the lash. But the sudden appearance of the veranda of Captain Eric, Pigeon and other whites, stayed Shep's blow. Sight of the white men gave Hasmail the temerity to warn Shep of the vengeance of Malungu.

"Shep Keyes, you big man," he admitted, "but alongside of great god Malungu you very little man."

Again Shep gestured threateningly with his whip, but concluded not to invite a rebuke from the commander. He cracked it at the trembling blacks.

"Get out of here," he roared to Hasmail. "An' tell your wooden image dot Shep Keyes ain't skeered of no black god—or white god neither. Git!"

Pigeon, watching from the veranda, understood Azaz. "That black devil," he whispered, "wants the girl Dawn for 'isself."

When the natives had vanished, leaving Shep Keyes in sole possession of their meeting grounds, Sister Hedwig, Captain Eric and Mooka re-entered the canteen, happy that Shep had chosen to postpone his punishment of Hasmail.

Pigeon, Azaz and Napoli, equally relieved, settled themselves at a table on the veranda.

"He don't scare me," he announced. "I've been places, an' I know things. Don't I, Pigeon?"

"That's right, Shep," was the Cockney's speedy agreement.

Shep squeezed his whip stick with what to him was an expression of love and trust in his promise. He was filled with a great content over his subjugation of the natives—before a white audience.

"Dere's only one religion dere's any good," he continued, "de religion o' de whip. When I crack my whip, dat's my call, for in dis o' hellhole down in Africa I am de big boss o' dem all. And when I wants a thing, den I gets dat thing. I'm de king."

At the conclusion of his oration he strutted about the veranda, grinning at the respectful Askari guards properly to warn them that he might be tempted to exercise his prerogatives at any moment.

"You tell Mooka not to go nowhere till I sees her," he suddenly commanded a native boy, who hurried off to comply. "And you," added Shep to an Askari guard, "stay awake and watch dem white vernin o' yours." His sweeping gesture indicated Pigeon and his companions.

"E's got all th' niggers thinkin' e's somethin' between a wizard an' a devil," muttered Pigeon bitterly, but, alas, too loudly. "I 'ates the dirty coot. E's a bully when e's sober and a demon when e's drunk. I'd like to—"

Pigeon's likes were forever denied utterance when, looking up, he beheld Shep's wrathful countenance disturbingly close to his own. His hastily-phrased apology perished in a series of guttural noises as Shep fondled his whip stock. In desperation, Pigeon turned appealing eyes to his comrades, but in their faces he found only the terror that transfigured his own.

"Well, Pigeon," inquired Shep amiably, "wot's you so mad at, huh?"

The theory that gibberish rises quickly out of terror was shattered in Pigeon's mind. He attempted a smile, an assurance that he had spoken in fun, but his facial muscles seemed paralyzed. His tongue, which seemed to have swollen to the size of a bath towel, was likewise unmanageable.

"Uh—ello, Shep—I mean to say—that is, I was just sayin'—that—well, after all—Shep, you're lookin' fit as a fiddle. Are you feelin' all right?"

Shep watched Pigeon's piteous, fright with pleasure. He stood in silence for a few moments, and when he spoke it was in measured tones, each word adding to Pigeon's terror.

"I ain't feelin' so good today," said the whip man. "Dese blacks gettin' religion alius makes me kind o' sick."

Politely he removed the cigarette from Pigeon's mouth. He puffed it with evident relish and, expelling a cloud of smoke into the Cockney's face, remarked:

"And you ain't foolin' me none, neither."

Before Pigeon could utter a disavowal of any such intention, Shep summoned an Askari guardsman. "Here," he ordered, pointing to Pigeon, "keep this prisoner cles in your eye, 'cause if you lets him git away you'll git the beatin' that's comin' to him."

At that moment Mooka appeared on the veranda in answer to his summons. Disclaiming several empty tables, Shep snatched an order to the prisoners to vacate their chairs. They slunk away as he settled himself into a chair and imperiously motioned Mooka to join him. She, fearing bad news, hesitated. She affected not to notice Mooka moved slowly over to his table, defiance in her manner.

"Dawn around?" asked Shep casually, after Mooka had seated herself.

The black woman looked at him suspiciously. "Why you want to know?" she demanded.

"You know what I want to know," Shep answered significantly.

Mooka leaned forward, her body rigid, determination in her voice. "Dawn getting ready to be goddess," she said. "After tomorrow she he Thabhu. No man can touch her."

Her dramatics left Shep unmoved. "Ceptin' me," he reminded her lightly, "I gets everything I wants."

"Ceptin' my daughter!"

"You—what?"

Mooka drooped her eyes before Shep's cynical gaze. "My—er, my daughter, Dawn," she finished lamely.

"Your daughter. Dat's a lie."

"Shit!" Guided by Mooka's pointing finger, Shep looked up to see a newly arrived cluster of prisoners attended by the Askari guards. His face grew harder as he noticed Tom Allen among them. Presently the prisoners, dismissed to await special orders from Captain Eric, scattered themselves around the veranda. Tom seating himself at a table not far from Shep and Mooka.

"Shep," said Mooka when she felt it was safe to resume, "you promised you wouldn't tell."

"If you acts right," stipulated the whip man, "I keeps my promise. But I knows what I knows," he added ominously.

Miss Marsden gave intimate details of the problems presented to her as a welfare worker, a work she took up without any records to guide her and which presented a great variety of problems. The largest group with which she comes into contact, she said, is composed of the mentally handicapped. Because of this, she said, the mental clinics are her right hand helper.

Miss Marsden discussed the overlapping cases and suggested that each case should go to its proper department, and that there should be no conflict of authority or action with existing agencies.

Among the men attending the meeting were Judge Hiram H. Keller, District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, W. H. Satterthwaite, Jr., president of the School Board, and Dr. C. Louis Siegler, president of the Rotary club. Women present represented many organizations in the county interested in the question presented.

The Ford

1 1/2-Ton Truck Chassis

The chassis of the Ford 1 1/2-ton truck has been materially strengthened at important points. The front axle, front spring and front radius rods are larger and stronger. Service brake drums on the front wheels have been increased to the same size as on the rear wheels, giving far greater braking power and reducing wear on brake linings.

The center cross member of the frame, which takes the driving thrust transmitted from the rear wheels, has been made stronger.

The rear axle is of new design and great strength.

An important feature is the new four-speed transmission. This adds greatly to the low-speed pulling power of the truck and makes the entire range of power and speed unusually flexible.

CRITZ USES "SIXTH SENSE" IN FIELDING BATTLE

NEW YORK, June 7—(INS)—"Did you see what I saw?"

It was the rasping voice of one Cincinnati fan to another, heard in a colorful grandstand setting recently.

"No," his companion answered, rather timidly.

"Well," replied the first, that's the ninth time in this game that Hughie kicked away the glove of the other side's second baseman before settling down at his post. I know, I've watched him."

The peculiar young man these chaps were discussing is the best second baseman in the big leagues—Hughie Critz, recently purchased by the New York Giants from the Cincinnati Reds. Hughie came to the Reds in 1924. But his remarkable fielding talent was enshrouded in the perennial inability of the Reds to get somewhere in the league standings. He was just a good defensive second baseman in the wrong environment.

A poor batter, Critz's fielding ability never diminished—just like his habit of kicking away his rival's glove. The moment one casts eyes on him, that nimble, velvety, uncanny way of his in guarding the keystone sack becomes strikingly evident.

"You've got to be clever and always act intelligently in this game," is the way Critz put it recently. "Years ago, when I started in the Cotton States League, I hit upon the idea that I'd have to actually sense an approaching play and in this manner get in the path of the ball without waiting for the actual hit. In time, I had this worked down to a science."

"This doesn't mean for an infielder to run wherever he cares to. You have to think and act accordingly," Critz declared with a smile.

Hughie is twenty-nine years old and is five feet seven inches in height. He scales 150 pounds and has an admirable physique. He has a better-than-average arm and is one of the best liked players in the circuit.

Like his new team mates on the Giants, Andy Reese and Eddie Marshall, Critz hails from the south. Born in Starkville, his family trekked to Greenwood when Hughie was still a tot. In 1926 the pride of the Critzes received his diploma from Mississippi A and M College, after which he joined his father in selling cotton.

"Dealing in cotton may be pretty soft," related Hughie, "but the money wasn't flowing in satisfactorily, so I hooked onto a semi-pro nine. Following the encouragement I received on this team, I joined the Greenwood club through the influence of some friends."

"I was always an infielder. Although I took trials at third and short, I stuck to second most of the time. The money wasn't anything to boast of, and I looked for bigger and better outfits. After receiving somewhat of a reputation, I was swapped to Memphis from where I went to Minneapolis in 1923. I played there the following year and in 1924 I reached the big leagues with the Reds."

By packing his southern accent in his kit with him and trundling it along to the Polo Grounds, Critz rounds out one of the greatest of modern time infielders, one that may take its place alongside the memorable combination of Chance, Evers, Tinker and Steinfeldt of the old Cubs, and Melvin, Collins, Barry and Baker of the old A's.

Surely Hughie is that certain second sacker John McGraw has been "watch-towering" for ever since Frankie Frisch and Rogers Hornsby were shorn of Giant uniforms. And so outstanding is Critz's infield chores that even the accompaniment of Terry, Jackson and Lindstrom will not completely dim this infield gem, for his swerves to the right, and darts to the left, while executed with machine-like efficiency, always retain the glamour which enables him to perfect those hair-raising thrusts—the same thrusts which have established him as the most proficient and colorful second baseman of them all.

You Can't Afford to Stand Still

Remember you can't afford to stand still

Because he who stands still is already going backward;

Neither can you afford to be a mere follower,

For he who is content to follow another is always behind.

"Well," said the purveyor of platitudes, "there are always just as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it."

"You're right," responded the disgruntled angler. "I'm the man who left them there."

There is a class of people who are unable to bear real troubles because of always bearing an overload of imaginary ones.

"Jimmy" Cooper will make his initial appearance of the season with the local team, and will hold down one of the outfield posts.

Manager Mulholland says he will have his regulars working pretty soon and "Then watch our smoke!"
